FROM BRETHERN FOUNDATION FUNDS

JUNE 2016

MARKETS AND THE ECONOMY

A batch of strong economic data along with receding global economic and financial markets risks served as background to the S&P 500 Index advancing 1.8 percent in May. The Federal Reserve indicated it would be “appropriate” for interest rates to “gradually rise” in the coming months if the U.S. economy continues to strengthen. Momentum in the housing sector remains healthy as April new home sales leaped 16.6 percent over March and sales of existing homes rose 1.7 percent in April from March. The unemployment rate fell to 4.7 percent from 5 percent primarily as the result of Americans dropping out of the labor force rather than finding new jobs. The bond market, as measured by the Barclays Capital Government/Credit Index, was flat in May.

The European Central Bank offered no additional stimulus as Eurozone inflation fell by 0.1 percent in May from a year earlier; this was the second straight month of deflation. Consumer and business sentiment in the European Union rose in May over April. Strong household spending and government demand drove Japan’s GDP to expand 1.7 percent on an annualized basis during the first quarter; they are considering additional stimulus measures and delaying a sales tax increase. Consumer spending along with service industry and manufacturing growth contributed to India’s first quarter GDP rising 7.9 percent from a year earlier. China’s manufacturing sector slowed in April. Russia’s GDP fell at an annualized rate of 1.2 percent in the first quarter of the year. International equities, as measured by the MSCI EAFE Index, slipped 0.9 percent in May.
